Placement Rates

Esalen neither advertises nor sponsored placement services.

Level 1 175-hour Practitioner Training Placement

All 2014 graduates took additional brief specialized courses to step up their training and class hours to complete their 250-hour CMP.

Out of 16 graduates a is working fulltime as a Physician's assistant, one is a fulltime RN with small bodywork practice on weekends, three are practicing massage part-time, four continue as students in the level III 500-hour tract at Esalen Institute, one is on disability from an unrelated work injury, one continues his career as a PhD tree specialist, One is employed full time on the Esalen Massage crew, one is offering massage sessions fulltime at the Post Ranch, One is continuing her studies to become a psychotherapist and uses her certificate to touch clients in her practice. Two continue in other Employment at the Esalen Institute. In summary: 8 are working in massage or health care, or 53 percent are practicing massage.

This compares to 39% who found placement in the 2013 class. That year's combined total of Level I and Level II graduates totaled 4; 8 were international students, 2 were already fully employed in another field and took the course for personal reasons. This left 31 graduates who were available for employment; 12 found full-time work in the massage or wellness field, or 41% of those available for employment.

Level II 250-hour practitioner training placement

See above.

The Level 11 practitioner training graduated 23 students, of whom 11 were California residents, 6 were US residents, and 6 were International students, unavailable for work in the US. Now, less than one year after completing their training, 4 of the 11 California students are certified in California (CMP) and working, though none are working full time, 4 are continuing their studies to match the new requirements. Three did not report, presumably not working in the field, or 36% of Californians are employed, none full time. Out of 6 US residents, 1 was already a full-time massage practitioner, 2 worked in the medical field and took the course as an adjunct to that work and continue their employment. Two remain employed elsewhere by choice, one is unreported at this time, or 50% of US resident graduates are employed fulltime in the massage or helping field.

Summary of those available for California and US employment 52% were employed in a bodywork or wellness field.

This compares to 50% in 2013.

This compares to 56% in 2012.

These figures are determined by written correspondence and personal conversation.

500-hour level III Placement

Of the 8 students who graduated in Esalen's 500-hour NCBTMB assigned School approved course, 7 are working full time in the field. The remaining man took it to build his skills but is retired, or 100% of those available for employment are employed. This compares to three graduates in 2013, two of whom are working full time or part time in the field or 67 percent found placement in the field.

Salaries

Wages remain consistent across all levels of massage employment; the determining factor is the ability of the graduate to obtain a local license to give massages. The CAMTC in California significantly altered the employment field starting in 2015 (the year many of these students would become employable as massage practitioners,). At this writing, some locations still allow practitioners to enter the market at 250 hours, but most areas now require 500 hours, so students will need to take additional coursework.

According to informal reports, of those who received certificates, 51% of level I and II are working in a career that either directly applies their massage training or they are using their training to supplement another career, such as health professional. Other students are undertaking advanced studies. 100% of those who graduate from the level III training are working in the field. This employment figure is determined by written correspondence and personal conversation. Documentation is on file.

Salaries ranged from $100-$60000, with the majority level I and II making $10000-15000, average $12,500. Level III earns $37000 on average.

Some of those (5) who chose not to certify informed the school in writing at the beginning of the course that they were enrolled for personal rather than vocational reasons. Most recent graduates supplement their massage income with other professional level employment so exact figures are difficult.

Data collection

This data for level I, II, and III is obtained from written and verbal reports by the students and by requests of transcripts to be sent to various State and City agencies. This data is preserved in their files. Cases where the data is incomplete are indicated in the text.

Examination Pass Rate

Massage school graduates did not sit for a state or local examination. Esalen Institute's curriculum for Level I and II meets the core curriculum requirements of the CAMTC. Level III fulfills the classroom requirements for the CAMTC. Please inquire of both your Esalen instructor and your local authorities if you have questions. Esalen does not maintain information regarding the salaries of massage students. For State California certification information, go to the California Massage Therapy Council (camtc@amgroup.us). In 2013 and in 2014, two students each year passed the NCBTMB examinations to become Nationally certified.

Esalen is a non-profit, public benefit corporation and does not advertise placement as a feature of its training. Nonetheless, the school is proud of the professional success of its graduates. It is approved for California Workforce Training funding.
